

There's nothing worse than a chick that won't let go

I know. I know. That title sounds MISOGYNISTIC!!!

But it's okay. I'm a chick.

And let's face it, the same can be said for some guys.

I'm sure you know someone who got dumped. And months later still couldn't let go of it.

You know the ones I'm talking about.

They ruin every social gathering by endlessly complaining about their exes.

I've been dumped a couple times in my life. Mostly I did the dumping.

But on those occasions when I got dumped, I'll admit. It stung.

I learned pretty damn fast that after the initial shock, none of my friends wanted to hear about it anymore.

Fortunately, I had good friends who were kind enough to say to me, "Dianny. You have to let this go and move on."

Clearly Hillary Clinton has no friends.

But we all knew that already, right? After all, friends would never let someone leave the house looking like this:

Unless of course you're a manicurist.

Any old how.

Five months ago today in the wee hours of the morning, Donald Trump was declared the winner of the 2016 Presidential Race.

And Hillary Clinton is still whining about it to this day.

While appearing at the 2017 Women in the World Summit this week, Hillary spent an interview kvetching about how she was done wrong.

It's not her; it's [fill-in-the-blank]:

James Comey
Russia
WikiLeaks
The news media
Bernie Sanders

And of course, misogyny.

From the Washington Examiner:

"Certainly, misogyny played a role. And that just has to be admitted, and why and what the underlying reasons for that, is what I'm trying to figure out myself," she said. "I think in this election there was a very real struggle between what is viewed as change that is welcomed and exciting to so many Americans and change which is worrisome and threatening to so many others."

"You layer on the first woman president over that, and I think some people, women included, had big problems," she added.

If Hillary had any friends, someone would pull her aside and say, "Listen Hill. Instead of blaming everyone else. Maybe you need to reflect on what you did wrong. And then let it go."

Let's face it. The Hillary team ran the most negative campaign in history.

On top of that, she ignored white working class voters in the rust belt states like Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

And yet losing the election is not her fault. It's never her fault.

In every public event since she lost, Hillary can't help herself. Eventually, she gets around to complaining about her loss and blaming it on everybody but her.

I wouldn't be in the least bit surprised if the few people who still spend time privately with Hillary are getting a daily dose of her endless complaints.

If only someone would tell her it's time to let it go.

Eventually, even those who voted for her are going to get tired of hearing her harp on this in speech after speech.

Because this kind of endless griping sucks all the oxygen out of the room. And even the people who like you get sick of it.

It doesn't make Hillary look good.

Then again, not much makes Hillary Clinton look good.

But at her age, being the chick that won't let go is going to get old really fast.
